

Scott's still smiling

John Scott remains a major sensation in minors

SYRACUSE, N.Y.

There were still some nine minutes remaining in the third period when the excited mob of youngsters began gathering outside the St. John's IceCaps locker-room door.

John Scott had just skated off after picking up a 10-minute misconduct for playing a minor role in a scuffle, and the antsy kids were tripping over themselves in hopes to catch a glimpse of the NHL's unlikeliest All-Star Game MVP.

"I think I saw him!" someone gasped, peering through the dimly lit maze of iron supports beneath the dusty stands of Syracuse's War Memorial Arena before a security person shooed them away. The scene was no different the night before, when extra security personnel were called in for crowd control.

This is what Scott's life has become in the aftermath of the hand-wringing controversy over whether the bit-playing journeyman enforcer was worthy of being deemed an all-star after being voted in by fans. The 6-foot-8 gentle giant instead emerged as an overnight sensation, earning admiration from fans and fellow players alike for standing his ground in the face of doubters and critics.

"It's almost like a movie," a smiling Scott said, reflecting back on the past two months. "Honestly, no one could ever script this would happen."

And yet, there is a movie in the works, which is also something Scott could never have envisioned.

"I'm a super lucky guy with all that's happened," he said.

If that sounds odd, it should: One moment in January, Scott was trying on his personalized pair of All-Star gloves in Arizona. The next, the Coyotes traded Scott to Montreal, where he was immediately shipped to the American Hockey League's remotest outpost in St. John's, Newfoundland and Labrador. That's 1,000 miles from Montreal and more than 3,000 miles away from Phoenix.

A few weeks later, the 33-year-old Scott was being hoisted on his teammates' shoulders amid fans chanting "M-V-P!" after he captained the NHL's Pacific Division team to an all-star title in Nashville, Tennessee.

PROTECT WATER LINES FROM FREEZING

The following actions should be considered to protect your water lines.

- Repair broken windows and ensure windows/vents are closed during the winter.
- Insulate water pipes in unheated areas, include crawl spaces.
- For sinks located against a non-insulated outside wall:
 - Open the vanity door to allow warm air to reach the water pipes.
 - A light bulb placed near the water pipe may generate enough heat to keep the water flowing.
 - Heat tape wrapped around the pipe may keep the pipe from freezing.
- For Residents of mobile homes
 - check the condition of the heat tape on their water service and meter
 - protect unheated indoor water meter with an insulated box
 - water pipes should be wrapped in insulation using heat tape
 - Outside water taps and underground sprinkler systems should have the water supply shut off inside the house at the isolation valve for the tap
 - Sprinkler lines and taps should be drained/blown out
- A thin stream of water (as thick as a pencil lead) running continuously from at least one tap will help prevent a frozen water service.
- If you plan to be away from home over the winter period, close the main water isolation valve in your home. This is located next to your water meter.

A frozen water service, or a burst water pipe, is an inconvenience and expense that most people would like to avoid. Please take precautions to prevent this happening in your home or business.
